

Drawing together can help you understand what someone with aphasia is trying to say! Below, draw a story of a superhero saving the town:

The form consists of six empty square boxes arranged in two rows of three. The boxes are connected by right-pointing arrows, indicating a sequence of events or a story. The first row has three boxes, and the second row has three boxes. The arrows are positioned between the boxes, pointing from left to right.