

Drawing together can help you understand what someone with aphasia is trying to say! Below, draw a story of a wizard going on a magical journey:

The form consists of six empty square boxes arranged in two rows of three. Each box is connected to the next by a right-pointing arrow, indicating a sequence of events or a story progression. The first row has three boxes, followed by an arrow, then the second row with three more boxes.